

PUBLIC SECTOR MANAGEMENT

A SERVICE FUNCTION AND A STRATEGIC POLICY TOOL WHICH CAN HELP ACHIEVE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC WELFARE OBJECTIVES.

Public administration in the 21st century is undergoing dramatic change, both in advanced economies and the developing world. Globalization and the pluralization of service provision are the driving forces behind these changes. Policy problems faced by governments are increasingly complex, wicked and global, rather than simple, linear, and national in focus. Public sector reform efforts in developing countries need to embrace these changes selectively and draw on a range of public management models that are appropriate to different contexts while putting the needs and interests of citizens at the heart of reform efforts. In this context, government organizations and public agencies keep validating service processes and actions that make them relevant to interests of the service recipients.

Total lending volumes for interventions in public sector management by the World Bank grew from an average annual inflation-adjusted total of $1.8 billion during the 1990s to $2.7 billion in the 2000s (World Bank 2012). The World Bank introduces Ease of Doing Business Rank for every country to encourage public service reform to enhance foreign direct investment.

Governments have to revitalize the public affairs management by addressing norms and values to serve their people, using possible means that help them to achieve goals and satisfy the customers. Government agencies should be able to fulfill public interests by implementing long-term organizational strategies, service commitments and monitoring and evaluation programs.

Shifting in focus on the interest of citizens requires more coherent responses from governments, greater collaboration across public sector agencies and investment for human resource development.

The 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) all, directly or indirectly, need an effective public service for successful implementation.
